HSC 2200
COMMUNITY HEALTH PROBLEMS

CATALOG DESCRIPTION

Community Health Problems (3) (A.A.) This course is a study of factors, which affect health, prevention and control of disease through organized community effort and utilization of available resources. (Spring)

PERFORMANCE STANDARDS
The student, at the successful completion of this course, should be able to:

1. Describe a working definition of community health.

2. Identify the growing community problems in health.

3. Describe the vital statistics, collection and operation of public health facilities.

4. Discuss our environmental factors and their role in community health.

5. Identify community health activities that transcend specific age groups.

6. Analyze and assess the mental and social health concerns and needs of a community.

7. Describe the placement of typical governmental functions at the national level and how they support community health and national health objective.

8. Describe the placement of typical governmental functions at the national level and how they support community health and national health objectives.

9. Identify various types of quackery and the sources of protection for consumers of health services and health products.

10. Analyze major trends in personal health care resources including types of personnel and facilities available in a community.

Date of Last Revision: 07/25/03

Permhsc2200