Students who must repeat a college credit course more than twice shall be required to pay tuition at 100 percent of the full cost of instruction equal to the College's non-resident fees at the time of enrollment. An attempt is defined as being registered in a class after the end of the posted add/drop registration period. Students who withdraw or fail a college credit course may be granted a one-time exception to the assessment of the full cost of instruction for repeating the course. The President is authorized to implement procedures for the approval of such an exception.
